

Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to force their stations to air an anti-Kerry documentary days before the election is a clear example of the dangers of media consolidation.

I am concerned because when people watch "Stolen Honor", and it is touted as a documentary one may believe that everything presented in this program is fact. I thought it was a FCC rule that candidates were supposed to have equal time. What ever happened to balanced reporting? It is also very frightening that so few companies control our news. It is wrong in a democracy to have for just a few people to control the information that we receive. How can we make informed decisions about our leaders and policies if we don't have all the information? Sinclair's actions show why we need to strengthen media ownership rules, not weaken them. They show why the license renewal process needs to involve more than a returned postcard. Thank you.
